

The old myth

is that a person is born with as many neurons as he would ever have.

This is false.

Though neurogenesis is most abundant before birth, scientists have shown that adults can make new neurons throughout their lives.